Milton's Last Poem.
The following beautiful poem is from the Oxford edition of Milton's Works, and as the work is rare and the lines cannot be easily known, we produce them:

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown Afflicted, and deserted by my mind;
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak; yet I sing,
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old, and helpless, I the more belong, Father Supreme, to Thee.

Oh! Mortal! O'er!
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When men pass coldly by—my weakness shows—
Thy light is on my soul.

Thy glorious face
Is beaming forth on me, and its holy light Shines in upon my lonely dwelling-place,
And there is no more night.

On my benighted soul
I recognize Thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see Thyself—O God! I hear!

I have thought to fear,
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am sheltered here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand Trembling where the feet of mortal never yet have been Wrapped in the radiance of Thy stainless hand, Which ever leads me on.

Visions come and go Shapes of radiant beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing, now
When Heaven is opening on my sightless eyes—
When all from Thee I seem to catch new life—
That earth is dark and drear.

In a pure clime
My being fills with rapture, waves of thought Roll in upon my soul; strains sublime
Break over me unceasing.

Give me now my lyre
I feel the strings of a gift divine;
With my bosom glow unearthly fire,
Lift by no skill of mine.

The Dead Letter.
CHAPTER V.

When I came out of the office, I encountered James on the steps, for the first time that day. I could not stop to make known the robbery to him, and telling him that his uncle wished to see him a few minutes, I hurried to my boarding house, where I had barely time to take some lunch in my room, while packing a small bag to be sent to the cars, before hurrying back to Mr. Argill's to attend the funeral escort to the train. James and I were two of the eight pall-bearers, yet neither of us could summon fortitude to enter the parlor where the body lay. I believed that James had not yet looked upon the corpse. We stood outside on the steps, up to the only taking our share of the burden after the coffin was brought out into the yard.

While we stood there, among many others, waiting, I chanced to observe his paleness and restlessness; he tore his black gloves in putting them off; I saw his fingers trembling. As for me, my whole being seemed to pulse, as a single, prolonged chill ran out of the darkened mansion and floated off on the sunshine up to the ear of God. They were taking the loved away from his bride. The next moment the coffin appeared; I took my place by its side, and we moved away toward the depot, passing over the very spot where the corpse was found. James was a step in advance of me, and as we came to the place, some strong inward recoil made him pause, then step aside and walk around the ill-starred spot on the sunshine up to the ear of God. The next moment the coffin appeared; I took my place by its side,

place, some strong inward recoil made him
pause, then step aside and walk around the
ill-starred spot on the sunshine up to the
ear of God. The next moment the coffin
appeared; I took my place by its side,
and we moved away toward the depot, passing over the very spot where the corpse was found. James was a step
